LECTURER IN MIDWIFERY

Hannover Medical School is among the leading medical universities in Germany with excellent results in health care, research, education and training. The midwifery research and education unit (MREU) with its close proximity to all local midwifery and obstetrical services is unique within the tertiary setting in Germany.

The MREU offers postgraduate online-education in the field of clinical research and evidence-based midwifery through the European MSc Midwifery (EMScM) Programme. The EMScM programme cooperates with three national and international partner universities and is designed to meet the needs of working midwives, as it can be studied part-time through a modular design which allows an individual and flexible time management.

You will be required to teach online modules and supervise students throughout their online studies as well as coordinate the programme. You are welcome to pursue your own research within an exciting and cooperative educational and clinical academic background.

Would you like to be part of this unique, postgraduate and midwifery-specific academic education programme in Germany? We are looking forward to welcoming a qualified midwife with

- at least a Master's degree and a clinical background, PhD welcome,
- experience in supervising Master's students,
- fluency in English and German.

The part-time position (50 %) will be available, initially, for two years. The employment will be with Hannover Medical School (TV-L). It is the university's aim to extend the contract period. Women and disabled persons are especially welcome to apply.

For further information or to submit your application, please contact Prof. Dr. Mechthild M. Gross at Gross.Mechthild@mh-hannover.de (phone: 0049-511-532-6116).
